

I hope you are not seriously going to allow cell phone use on airplanes. It is hard enough living with it at the gate or after landing, but what a nightmare if allowed during flight. Most cell phone towers do not aim upward so most calls are going to be interrupted a million times as you fly over one tower after another. Most cell phones do not connect to satellites. This means we have to listen to someone talk for an hour just to get a five minute message across.

Because the connections will be bad in flight, you are going to have people constantly pushing the tonepad buttons and making repeat calls just to finish a conversation. We will have to endure their phones ringing an assortment of tunes throughout the plane.

Please do not allow cell phones in flight.

Sincerely, Don Stewart
